Physical Description of Site (attach 1 or 2 photos):

The Davis house is a two-story, multiple gable structure, with a one-story front porch, constructed on a natural rise in the landscape. The wood frame house is now stuccoed, but probably was originally constructed with horizontal weatherboarding typical of the time and area. The oldest portion of the house dates from 1906 and was originally a one or two room lean-to shack which (according to the current owner) now comprises the rear first floor kitchen area of the main house. If so, the original structure is not immediately discernable from the interior or exterior of the current house. The front rooms were added circa 1914, and the second story in the 1920s. These additions constitute the main body of the current house, which appears to be pretty much in its original condition with the exception of the applied stucco, and the partial enclosure of the front porch. The 2/1 double hung sash windows are original, but are disguised by Bahama shutters.

Original interior features are still intact, including a brick fireplace, wood floors, staircase, decorative glazed panel doors, and an unusually high first floor ceiling which creates an elegant effect not typical of rural, South Dade farm houses. Another unusual feature is the basement. A rear room workshop with no interior finishing is still intact also.

Significance - Brief summary including documentary evidence that indicates the historical, architectural or archeological significance of the site.

This house is significant because of its association with the Snell and Davis families, pioneers of South Dade; and because of its age, although there have been several additions over the years. The oldest portion of the house was constructed in 1906, according to the current owner, Mrs. Virginia Cooper. It was a lean-to shack and the home of Newton Snell who homesteaded the tract shortly after the turn of the century. Snell lived in South Dade for many years. He was a farmer and known by other pioneers as an eccentric.

About 1913, Mr. Snell turned his house and property over to his daughter, Ruth and her husband, Samuel Davis. They made two major additions to the house (see physical description) and raised a family there. Mr. Davis spent the remainder of his life there; Mrs. Davis sold the property in 1971 to Virginia Cooper, a neighbor.

In her later years, Mrs. Davis was known locally as the "Day Lily Woman" because she cultivated her entire yard with the flowers which she sold to area residents. Mr. Davis, like his father-in-law, was a farmer, but also a violin and furniture maker. He was known as a fine craftsman who repaired violins for the University of Miami School of Music, and for regional symphony orchestras. Some of his furniture is still in the house. Mr. Davis' workshop remains in the house with some of his materials extant. Mr. Davis also added a basement after the main house was constructed, by dynamiting the underlying rock.

The Snells and Davises are considered pioneer families in South Dade County. Some of their relatives remain in the area.

Special Standards for Certificate of Appropriateness:

Impacts - Impact of the designation on proposed public improvements, renewal projects or private development.

Draft Resolution Designating the Property:

Whereas, the Snell/Davis House is associated with the pioneer Snell and Davis families, and

Whereas, a portion of the Snell/Davis House was a primitive pioneer structure built in 1906 and the existing wood frame house, although stuccoed, was built in 1914 and a second floor added in 1920, and

Whereas, the preservation of historic sites is in the best interest of Dade County and its citizens, and

Whereas, the Snell/Davis House is located in Section 29, T. 56 S., R. 39 E., SW 1/4 of NW 1/4 of NW 1/4 of SE 1/4. 2.5 acres,

Now, therefore, be it resolved that the Historic Preservation Board on Thursday, December 2, 1982, has designated the Snell/Davis House as an individual historic site pursuant to the Metropolitan Dade County Historic Preservation Ordinance (81-13) and that the Snell/Davis House is subject to all rights, privileges, and requirements of that ordinance.

Designation is approved as evidenced by the signature of the Historic Preservation Board Chairman.

Staff Recommendation:

Based on the request for designation and the findings of this report, staff recommends the designation of the Snell/Davis House as an individual historic site.
